

Carlton Fields' Andrew (Drew) Hinkes Quoted in Media Reports on Blockchain Issues

April 04, 2019

Carlton Fields attorney Andrew (Drew) Hinkes was quoted in several media reports on legal issues affecting the blockchain industry, including the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's latest framework for startups seeking to issue tokens.

"While it's helpful and it's good to see the SEC remains focused in this area, it's not quite as useful as a law or a rule or even formal guidance would be," Hinkes told CoinDesk.

Hinkes' commentary was also featured in The Block, CoinTelegraph, and three articles in Decrypt:

- "Will Consumer Token Offerings pass muster with the SEC?"
- "Help wanted: The SEC is looking for a crypto genius"
- "SEC publishes first ICO no-action letter, releases 'framework' for token sales"

Related Practices

Business Transactions

Blockchain and Digital Currency

Litigation and Trials

